Knives Out

Top-notch yet affordable kitchen knives are extremely hard to come by. But the co-founder and former CEO of Endy, Mike Gettis, and his partner, Noelle Hjelte, are certainly making it easier with the launch of their new brand Kilne. What makes Kilne different? The company works directly with equipment producers, which ensures high-quality products and cuts out retailer price markups. The blades are crafted from Chromium-molybdenum-vanadium steel so they stay sharp for the long haul—perfect for precision cutting. The full knife set includes an 8" chef's knife, 7" Santoku knife, 8" bread knife, 3.5" paring knife, kitchen shears, sharpening steel and an acacia knife block, all for less than $200. Sold!

Di'be good, I promise

In recent years, avocados have become a staple in so many Canadian kitchens. So if you're into reaping the healthful benefits of this nutrient-rich fruit, check out avocado oil. We tried Chosen Foods' newest avocado oil cooking sprays that come in three varieties of next-level flavour infusions: Garlic, Italian Herb and Chipotle. These sprays use a combination of natural plant extracts and pure avocado oil, so you can spray them directly onto veggies, salads and meats. We even used them to make a healthy garlic bread, and boy, was it ever delicious!
